1. Yonge-Eglinton

The overachieving Tracy Flick of neighbourhoods scores high in just about every category, particularly health, entertainment and employment. Sandwiched between Forest Hill and Lawrence Park, the area is aspirational without being ridiculously out of reach—property values steadily increase by more than 11 per cent year over year—and there’s a mix of detached homes and glittery condo developments. The impending debut of the Eglinton Crosstown LRT will make Yonge and Eg one of the city’s busiest and most crucial transit hubs. This is all candy for people who admire the Jane Jacobs model of city building, which is presumably why chief planner Jennifer Keesmaat calls the area home.
